

THE " BRIDGE TOO FAR " SERIES AWARD

Best "Fall Gelb"

(For ANY subject related to Germany's "Case Yellow" World War Two Invasion of "the Low Countries")

(left) Fokker D.21 fighter made a credible but ultimately futile stand in the short time of Holland's resistance to aerial/airborne attacks.

(right) Ju-87Bs continued building up a "terror weapon" reputation for "Stuka" during the effort. It wouldn't last long ...

(below) Fokker T.8 ended up with all three sides of this conflict. Germany captured, used some. Dutch of course originally employed them. Several served in RAF Coastal Command and proudly displayed the Free Dutch insignia on aircraft nose as seen here.
